

Joseph John Fallert House

123 E. Valencia Drive

1907

Colonial Revival

Status: Significant Property

The house was built for John Fallert and his fiancée, Carrie Dyckman, who moved into the house after their marriage on October 30, 1907, and they lived in the house until 1920. Fallert was a driver for Brown & Dauser, a lumber company, but held a number of jobs in his life: teamster, rancher, carpenter, janitor and hospital worker.

With its absolutely unique design, this house is one of the most remarkable from turn-of-the-century Fullerton. Two dramatic south-facing gables, one sheltering a recessed balcony behind an arched opening, contrast with the gable on the west-facing dormer. Other features include the shingling on the upper story, the porch's unusual design with the pseudo-Doric columns, and the massive pieces of sandstone that sheath the ground level.

A second residence was constructed on the property in 1959, at the rear of the lot.
